

Political Claims Inquiry Game

Structured Fact-Finding Between Opposing Perspectives • Facilitated by Grok (xAI)
Version 2.6 • June 2026

Introduction & Objective

This game provides a structured, respectful format for two players to explore politically charged claims from different perspectives through evidence-based questions to Grok. The goal is not to win, but to reach the point where both sides can agree on what the evidence presented to Grok actually shows, while building AI literacy through direct engagement with sourced, evidence-focused responses.

Important Note on Grok: Grok is not infallible and regularly updates its knowledge as new information becomes available. Challenging or questioning its answers with evidence or counterpoints is not only valid, it is encouraged and helpful for reaching better understanding.

How to Play

Step	Description
1	Red or Blue starts with a clear, specific question to Grok.
2	Grok provides an evidence-based response.
3	The other player asks their question, which may address claims they have encountered or seek clarification.
4	Grok answers.
5	The first player continues with a relevant follow-up question.
Repeat	Alternate turns while staying focused on the topic thread.

Core Rules

- Questions should seek evidence, clarification, or verification of specific claims.
- Phrasing such as "I heard that..." or direct questions like "Did X happen?" are valid.
- Keep questions relevant to the ongoing thread for coherent exploration.
- One focused question per turn.
- Grok aims to provide answers grounded in primary sources, investigations, and documented facts.
- Follow-up questions are encouraged if more detail or counter-evidence is available.
- Maintain respect and focus on the claims themselves, not on each other.

Example Flows

Blue Goes First

Blue: "Did Donald J. Trump suggest injecting disinfectant to cure COVID during a White House press briefing?"

Grok answers: Yes. During the April 23, 2020 briefing, Trump said...

Red: "Did Trump later say the comment was sarcastic, and was there evidence people actually followed it?"

Grok answers the follow-up.

And so on in this fashion.

Red Goes First

Red: "Is there any credible evidence that Donald J. Trump is a pedophile?"

Grok answers: No, there is no credible evidence supporting that claim...

Blue: "But I heard that in the Epstein files there was a witness claiming Trump sexually abused a 13-year-old girl who bit him."

Grok answers.

Red: Follow-up question on details or verification status.

And so on in this fashion.

Staying Focused During Play

It is important to bring up one question at a time and continue drilling down on one area, even if Red or Blue have multiple issues with Grok's answer. Note the other concerns (e.g. "Bookmark concerns A, B, and C"). When the current drill-down is complete, simply instruct Grok to return to the next bookmark for your next query. This keeps the conversation coherent and productive.

Best Practices for Grok Questions

- Be specific: "List the top 5 most credible pieces of evidence..." or "What primary sources say about X?"
- Use clear questions like "Did X happen?" or "I heard that..." to ask for verification.
- Request structure: "Answer in bullet points with sources" or "Pros and cons table".
- Follow up iteratively: "Based on your last answer, drill into Y".
- Add focus: "Focus on primary sources" or "Note uncertainties and unverified aspects".
- One focused question per turn works best for clear, deep responses.

Tips for a Great Game

- Both Red and Blue perspectives are valued equally.
- Take breaks if emotions rise.
- Success comes from clearer shared understanding of what the evidence actually shows (or does not show).

Ready to begin? Either Red or Blue can start — share your first question!
